

Treasury Department,

BUREAU OF THE MINT.

Washington, D. C., Jan'y. 21st, 1882.

Sir:

Your letter of the 16th. inst. submitting three questions relating to the method of keeping your Bullion Accounts was received.

The directions given in my letter of Jan'y 17th. answer your first question as to what disposition should be made of bullion deducted for charges on silver bullion for bars.

As to the second question, I now see no objection to keeping the accounts for old minor coins exchanged for new as you are doing. Should any change hereafter seem desirable, I will advise you.

I reply to the third that the method of keeping the Melter & Refiner's Minor Coinage Metal Account in ounces, omitting cost, is much simpler, and in harmony with the present method of keeping the Bullion Accounts, and I shall not object to your omitting to charge him with the cost of the metal unless practical difficulties are hereafter discovered in doing so.

Respectfully,
Horatio B. Brachman

Your letter of the 16th inst. submitting three questions relating to the method of keeping your Bullion Accounts was received.

The directions given in my letter of Jan'y 17th answer you first question as to what disposition should be made of bullion deducted for charges on silver bullion for bars.

As to the second question, I now see no objection to keeping the accounts for old minor coins exchanged for new as you are doing. Should any change hereafter seem desirable, I will advise you.

I reply to the third that the method of keeping the Melter & Refiner's Minor Coinage Metal Account in ounces, omitting cost, is much simpler, and in harmony with the present method of keeping the Bullion Accounts, and I shall not object to your omitting to charge him with the cost of the metal unless practical difficulties are hereafter discovered in doing so.
